Surpliced Women in Choirs

That has been my rule all my life, and I have conscientiously adhered to it. The Bishop of New Jersey has forbidden the women of his church choirs to vestments, exactly upon what grounds it would be difficult to may. The vestments are worn by several women choirs in this city, notably St. Bartholomew's and St. George's. The long black cassocks and white cotters are rather impressive, while the wearing of the little cap is, of course, in accord ance with the ancient tradition that women must not appear with unco heads in the churches.
